Migrating Content from a Legacy ECM

A Strategic Imperative
for Future-Ready
Organizations

A Guide for Forward-Thinking
Decision Makers

The Big Picture

With today's rapid pace of technological change, the shift to hybrid work, and growing compliance demands, outdated content platforms have become more than just a nuisance — they're a liability.

Whether it's limited integration, poor user experience, or just the mounting cost of keeping the lights on, the cracks are starting to show. The good news? You're not alone — and you don't have to stay stuck.

Why Now?

Organizations are migrating not just because they can, but because they must. Content fragmentation causes missed opportunities, slow responses, and risk exposure — especially with regulations like GDPR and increasing cyber threats.

A Modern ECM Environment Enables:

Organizations are migrating not just because they can, but because they must. Content fragmentation causes missed opportunities, slow responses, and risk exposure — especially with regulations like GDPR and increasing cyber threats.

- Real-time access to the right content
- Lower IT overhead
- Faster decision-making
- A clear path to the cloud

If you're thinking about AI readiness or automation, foundational steps like content migration aren't optional. They're non-negotiable.

The Risk of Doing Nothing

Still relying on multiple ECMs? You're not alone — 81% of organizations use 3 or more. But with every extra platform comes cost, risk, and delay. Data gets harder to govern. Licensing and support costs climb. Institutional knowledge leaves the building.

The real cost isn't just financial. It's strategic.

What's the ROI?

- Up to 10% content reduction through smart curation
- Lower licensing & maintenance costs
- Improved compliance with tighter content control
- Productivity gains from faster access and fewer workarounds

While these returns vary by organization, the business value of better content control is consistent — and compounding.
